Aadit Palicha

"Find something you love building, go deep into it, and meaningful value will follow."

Aadit Palicha, born on January 15, 2001, in Mumbai, India, is the co-founder and Chief Executive Officer of Zepto, one of India's fastest-growing quick-commerce startups. He completed his International Baccalaureate diploma with a perfect score of 45/45 from GEMS Academy, Dubai, where he also held leadership roles such as deputy head boy and president of the Modern Debating Society.

Aadit later enrolled at Stanford University to study computer science but dropped out to pursue entrepreneurship. In 2018, he co-founded GoPool, a school transportation app in Dubai, with his childhood friend Kaivalya Vohra. Although the venture did not scale, it gave him early exposure to building products and solving real-world problems. During the COVID-19 pandemic, the founders returned to India and launched KiranaKart, a grocery delivery platform that failed to gain traction but provided deep insights into India's consumer behavior and logistics challenges.

In 2021, KiranaKart was rebranded as Zepto, a name derived from "zeptosecond," the smallest unit of time in physics. Zepto introduced a 10-minute grocery delivery model using hyperlocal dark stores and a customer-backward approach. The company scaled rapidly, raising significant funding and reaching a valuation of over $5 billion by 2024. Zepto now operates across major Indian cities and supports thousands of livelihoods.
